Star quality

Oras tapware's new ergonomic handles make life easier for everyone.

Elegant Oras single lever tapware features an ergonomically designed extended handle for greater control for users, especially the elderly and those with a disability.

The commercial quality Oras Vega Extended Mixer is designed for compliance with AS1428, governing publicly accessible toilet design, and for disability-accessible design applications.

The European-styled tapware is ideal for commercial, health care, domestic and industrial applications, while still user-friendly and attractive. "Oras extended lever models are specifically designed to be non-institutional in character, style and universal functionality," says Enware managing director Paul Degnan. "They provide a robust quality design that is equally suitable for public use while incorporating strong ergonomic and anthropometric design for safe, easy use and control to assist elderly and disabled users."

Other safety features include highly visible coloured temperature indicators on the top of the handle, particularly useful for those with visual impairment.

Maintenance is minimised by a highly robust cartridge design shared by all Oras tapware, with a metal stem for superior strength, long life and simplicity of maintenance.

Leading companies that have chosen Enware tapware and safety systems include McDonald's, Coles supermarkets, Qantas Catering, Woolworths Australia, St Vincent's Hospital Sydney and the Royal Brisbane Hospital. ■

Sleek accessories

Maurizio Duranti's new accessories are inspired by the Art Deco designs of the 1920s and 1930s.

Maurizio Duranti has just released a range of matching accessories to complement its Belmondo tapware collection.

The new accessories collection includes stunning towel rails, shelves, robe hooks and soap dishes. The pieces draw inspiration from the simple, geometric wing of the popular Art Deco design movement, which lasted from 1925 to the early 1940s.

Both functional and elegant, the Belmondo Accessories collection is the perfect accompaniment to ultra modern design. ■
