Rebeca Park, marketing manager at Rogerseller, says there has been a move away from cold, sharp edges towards more organic shapes.

"There is a definite trend emerging which sees a return to a real retro, classical look, with soft corners and edges," she says.

Toilet design is now deceptively simple, according to Renee.

"Wall-hung pans and concealed or in-wall cisterns are often associated with public rest rooms, but with compact, sleek and stylish designs in pans and buttons this look is becoming a popular option for home builders and renovators," she says.

Says Rebeca: "Generally speaking, people are more aware of investing in their bathrooms now. We spend a lot more time in this part of the home, and people recognise the importance of making it aesthetically pleasing as well as functional."
