

Colour splash in bathroom

COLOUR is making a comeback in the bathroom and not just with accessories and tiles, according to Paco Jaanson, manufacturers of bathroom accessories.

From brights to pastels, a splash of colour adds pizzazz and fun to the bathroom sanctuary. In particular, coloured basins offer an alternative to traditional white vitreous china.

According to the European-based company, urban designers have become more experimental with the advent of technology and are using new and interesting palates.

While coloured basins were introduced briefly during the '70s, they quickly made way for the forever-popular neutral shades.

Paco Jaanson reports that pastels are making a comeback in bathroom trends throughout Europe, with shades such as pale lavenders and fresh mint greens that are modern and fun, yet timeless and easy to incorporate into changing wall and tile palates.

Both pastels and strong colours are proving a sharp and popular alternative to traditional creams and whites.

Paco Jaanson's new Kong colour basin collection offers a host of alternatives to bring a little zest to winter bathroom interiors.
