

Accessories tap into Art Deco cool

Towel rail from Belmondo's new range.

Clear, elegant styling.

Tapware designer Maurizio Duranti has drawn influence from the work of Jean E. Puiforcat and the Art Deco period to create a collection of accessories to match his recently released Belmondo line of taps.

The range launched the Italian designer into the realm of world-class bathware designers and the new accessories collection adds the finishing touches.

Including towel rails, shelves, robe hooks and soap dishes, the accessories complement the Belmondo range and add a stylish finish.

Mr Duranti said he wanted to create something different to the minimalist style and shift the focus back to strong, distinctive designs. He called the Belmondo range "an interpretation inspired by the 1920s and 30s design vanguard. The idea behind the entire collection was to explore the culture of the Art Deco period, inspired above all by French artist designer Jean E. Puiforcat".

Belmondo accessories encompass many aspects of the Art Deco movement which was considered elegant, functional and ultra modern at the time. Belmondo accessories start from $150 and are distributed by Paco Jaanson.
