

Colour splash

COLOUR is making a comeback in the bathroom and not just with accessories and tiles.

From bold bright shades to lush pastels people are welcoming a splash of colour to add a bit of pizzazz and fun to their bathroom sanctuary.

In particular coloured basins are a dazzling alternative to traditional white vitreous china. Urban designers have become a lot more experimental with the advent of technology and are using new and interesting palates.

Coloured basins were introduced briefly during the 1970s but quickly made way for the forever popular clean, neutral shades.

Colour is now making a retro comeback – pastels and strong colours are proving a sharp and popular alternative to traditional creams and whites.

The powder room is another space where home owners are introducing coloured pieces which can especially provide the wow factor for visitors.

At the moment pastels are a distinct favourite in bathroom trends throughout Europe with shades such as pale lavenders and fresh mint greens that are modern and fun, yet timeless and easy to incorporate into changing wall and tile palates.

After decades of the neutral shades, the housing industry believes it's time to add that splash of colour which can brighten up bathrooms.

Paco Jaanson offers a host of fascinating alternatives – in perfect timing with the cooler weather to bring a little zest to winter bathroom interiors.
