Colour the latest bathroom trend

BETH MUHLING

Colour, from bold shades right through to lush pastels, is making a comeback in the bathroom. And it's not just being splashed around in the bathroom with accessories and tiles.

Now a new line of coloured basins offers an interesting alternative to traditional white china and can create an eye-catching feature. Paco Jaanson has several to choose from in its Kong Colour Basin Collection, with a matt violet basin from $1380 and a matt green or platinum basin from $1560.

Coloured basins were first introduced briefly in the 1970s but were passed over in favour of ever-popular clean, neutral shades.

But now colour is back and so far proving a popular alternative to traditional creams and whites.

People are particularly experimenting with coloured pieces in guest toilets that have basins, according to Paco Jaanson director Ari Zorlu.

"It's a space that can provide the 'wow' impact for your visitors and perhaps inspire them to add a dash of colour to their own bathroom," he said.

Pastels were currently the most popular trend in European bathrooms, he said.

Favourite shades included pale lavenders and fresh mint greens that were modern and fun yet timeless and easy to incorporate into changing wall and tile colour schemes, Mr Zorlu added.
