

BATHROOM

DON'T MISS A BEAT

DISCO SHOWER ADDS ELEMENT OF FUN

Janita Singh

THE shower has evolved from being a necessary daily ritual to an emotional experience where the user wants to walk out feeling renewed and refreshed.

But there's more. Fun has been added to the experience, courtesy of the new rain head by iB Rubinetterie.

Called Aquabeat, but more affectionately known as the disco shower, it's a ceiling-installed multifunction showerhead that comes with theatrical chromotherapy, otherwise known as rainbow lights.

And it's all about lights, water, action, according to Ari Zorlu, of Paco Jaanson, the distributor.

Zorlu says chromotherapy is often described as alternative medicine. "It is an added value to the user's inner predisposition to pamper or energise themselves," Zorlu says.

Aquabeat achieves this by using coloured lights, which have been carefully selected from different colour pallets, that users can choose to reflect their different moods.

"Whether you are looking to become energised for the day or wind down for sleep, Aquabeat can do this," Zorlu says.

He says the shower's Italian designers, Andrea and Davide Bregoli, wanted a fresh, new approach to modern bathware.

"Showers are being designed with multiple settings so users are able to personify their experience ... it's about catering for the need of everyone in the house and tailoring to their own emotional state."

A waterproof remote-control gives the user total control, whether it's relaxing in a full body rain shower, enjoying the choice of rainbow colours or relish in the double waterfall for a therapeutic experience.

It's lights, water, action with the Aquabeat.

"With a customisable shower experience, the bathroom will soon become the most desired room in the house," Zorlu says.

The Aquabeat is available in four versions and three sizes.

The biggest is almost 1m by 60cm and includes five different shower functions.

Priced from $3300, details at pacojaanson.com.au